>Menthuthuyoupi sighs loudly, turning on his much more petite companion.

"Would you stop?"

"Stop what?" The blonde asks, feigning innocence as he smiles up at him.

"I've seen the way you look at me when you think I don't notice, and I want you to stop."

"Honestly, I have no clue what you're talking about. You should elaborate." He turned away, going back to tuning his instrument.

"You think that all percussionists are people who just bang on our instruments and hope for the right pitch to come out."

"They are," Shaiapouf mutters as the tall man continues, obviously pissed at the comment.

"And you think you're all high and mighty just because you play the violin."

At that the blonde turns, his eyebrows drawn together and a scowl on his face. "It's a viola."

"Eh, they all look the same to me."

Shaiapouf's face goes red with anger as he picks up his music and leaves the room, knocking over a stand as he leaves. Menthuthuyoupi just shakes his head, returning to his usual practice before the blonde had so very rudely interrupted him.
